Let intimacy reign in your heart

IT HAS OFTEN BEEN SAID THE MOST youthful-looking people are those who "carry" themselves well. Meaning, they achieve centered-ness within themselves that spells B-A-L-A-N-C-E.

In a world that revolves around the key words "success" and "survival," people are often forced to compete with one another. The environment becomes friendly to stress. Yet, despite the constant emergence of stressful situations, the human psyche is equipped with a coping mechanism. The challenge is to keep this capability fine-tuned and in good working order.

Intimacy vs detachment

Neutral to the human emotional makeup is the need to experience intimacy. The lack of intimacy in one's life will push a person toward a cold and dark corner. Note the warning signs that your world is becoming less and less intimate and more and more detached.

1. Work is your priority.
2. Professional and personal goals are more important to you than people/family/loved ones.
3. You avoid one-on-one encounters by deflecting a request as closeness.
4. You keep busy to the point of exhaustion to your usual excuse is "I'm tired, no energy to talk now..." or "I'm so busy, have no time to spare."

Stop for a moment and consider the effect on others of such a lack of responsiveness, sympathy and warmth. The final result is alienation, which can throw you off-balance.

When you detach yourself from others, the detachment also alienates you from yourself. And when you are alienated from yourself, you are no longer in a cold and dark corner because you become the coldness and darkness itself.

Psychotherapists say the basis for alienation is an unconscious recognition or acceptance of pain, simply because it is much easier to run away from, than face, an emotion.

Practice connecting

The experience of intimacy is not just between two people. It can be with a group whose energies harmonize with yours. With your emotional health in mind, try to do the following:

Workplace: Gather your staff, co-workers, colleagues around. Do an activity together.

INSIDE OUT

Talk, share, laugh.

Family: At the dining table, start a conversation. A simple "How was your day?" should be enough to get things started.

Friends: Make it a tradition to keep in touch with your various friends. Set regular lunch or dinner dates to catch up on life.

Community: Feel that the plight of one is the plight of all. Understanding and being supportive of the needs of the less privileged is a sure way to find meaning. Adopt a cause and join a civic club or simply go to the nearest street children village and do volunteer work.

Intimate with the self

Intimacy is the result of love and trust; conversely, fear and doubt achieve the opposite. Emotion is very much a part of one's well-being.

Get a piece of paper. Write down your dreams and wishes in their order of importance to you. Read them out loud as though you were sharing them with your best friend. Face your reflection in the mirror with paper and affirm: "My most intimate dreams come true."

Body connect

The first basic step toward intimacy is the power of touch. Use your hands and briskly brush your body for five minutes with your fingertips from feet to top of the head. Feel every contour of your body. That's to stimulate your circulation. Then, rub yourself with a hydrating combination of your favorite body oil, a drop of mint, rose or lavender to relax or lemon/orange to revive.

You can also add three drops of calamansi or lemon juice to your carrier oil for a homemade mix. The aromatherapy oil will immediately send relaxation signals to the brain and the rest of your body.

Intimacy is reason itself for being. Allow it to reign in your heart's beginning today.
